Plasticine: A Reconfigurable Architecture For Parallel

The Architectural Patterns for Parallel Programming presented here represent an attempt to help with the initial selection of the overall structure of a parallel software program. 2.

Architectural Patterns for Parallel Programming

The Architectural Patterns for Parallel Programming is a collection of patterns related with a method for developing the coordination structure of parallel software systems.

Applying architectural patterns for parallel programming

Parallel Programming relies on the coordination of computing resources, so that they simultaneously work towards a common objective. Achieving this requires extra effort from the software designer, because of the increased complexity involved. Furthermore, as Parallel Programming is considered a ...
