force-standardized blunt force to the skull using various common blunt objects. These objects include hammer, hockey stick and helmet. In this study, blunt force trauma is defined as a blunt object striking the body. This definition would thus allow us to cover trauma caused by a blow or movement of a body striking against a blunt object.

Using recorded wind speeds from the date of the incident and the weight of the umbrella, we were able to calculate the pressure with which the umbrella struck the victim to be 16,000 PSI. Witness reports, medical records, scene details, and examination of a rental beach umbrella allowed the forensic pathologist to conclude that the object causing this woman's death was a windblown beach umbrella.
